Posted 3/15/2006

Proposals are being accepted through Monday, March 27, for the Gordon Clark Ramsey Award for Creative Excellence for Adjunct and Part-Time Faculty.

The award, which is now in its second year, was established upon the retirement of Gordon Clark Ramsey, himself a long-time adjunct who served as Secretary to the Faculty Senate for 18 years.

A DVD with instructions for applying for a Ramsey Award is available at the Faculty Center for Learning Development (ext. 4253). It may be taken out overnight in VHS form.

Two recipients will be selected for a cash award and recognition at the fall faculty-staff kickoff. The award is open to any adjunct or part-time faculty member who has taught at the University of Hartford for at least two semesters, one of which must be fall 2005 or spring 2006.

The award may be for:

- a proposed scholarly or creative project related to classroom teaching,
- OR prior sustained scholarly or creative work related to classroom teaching over several years.

The cash award may be used for travel to conferences, for consultations, or for materials, supplies, or other expenses related to the creative project.

The proposal may be a nomination or self-generated, and should consist of no more than two single-spaced pages (no supplemental materials or attachments), and a one-page letter of support from a University of Hartford full-time faculty member or administrator.

The application/nomination form, the proposal, and the letter of support must be submitted to the Faculty Senate Office, CC 314, by 4 p.m. on Monday, March 27.
